

MEDICAL STAFF GOVERNANCE, CREDENTIALING AND PEER REVIEW

OUR APPROACH

Medical staffs are the nexus between administration and patients/consumers. The effectiveness of medical staff operations, including governance structures and processes, associated credentialing and privileging activities, and quality oversight/peer review activities of services have a direct correlation to overall organization performance, both in the quality of health care delivery and financial success.

Hall Render represents hundreds of hospitals and other facilities across the country on a daily basis in issues relating to Medical Staff Governance, Credentialing and Peer Review as primary and supporting counsel. Our Medical Staff team members have established reputations across the country at the national and regional level as industry leaders in these areas.

Hall Render's experience as a health care-focused law firm with a national client base has provided us with a keen understanding of medical staff organization and operational issues, as well as unique insight into the variety of issues involved in medical staff self-governance and effective medical staff operations. Our team advises hospitals, health systems and medical staffs on organizational and structural issues related to the numerous challenges facing medical staffs and physicians today and assists clients in reviewing the efficiency and effectiveness of their medical staff structures and related processes. Our attorneys counsel hospital administration, medical staff leadership and governing boards on virtually every aspect of medical staff organization and governance. We prepare medical staff bylaws and related governing and credentialing documents, ensuring the use of best practices and compliance with state law and accreditation standards. We also provide advice and counsel to appropriately address medical staff leadership challenges.
